of disease among the apparently healthy general population as well as a select group of business executives, separate studies showed recently. Both studies were published in a recent issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association.

Taken together they emphasize not only the value of periodic checkups but the doctor's increasing concern with maintaining the health of the physically fit.

In the first study, 92 per cent of 10,709 apparently healthy persons given overall examinations at Tulane University School of Medicine, New Orleans, were found to have "disease or abnormalities of varying significance."

Much of the disease was in the early stages. Less than one per cent had malignancies, or serious disease. The persons accepted for examination during a 12-year period from 1946-58 considered themselves well and had not been checked over by a doctor in the preceding six months. They represented all socio-economic levels and many occupations. The majority were between 30 and 49 years of age, and 75.5 per cent were women.

The type of examination was one that could be carried out in a doctor's office, the author of the article, Dr. Joseph E. Schenthal, pointed out. Dr. Schenthal said the study was part of the current trend in medicine to find out more about the well person.

"With heart, vascular, and malignant diseases as leading causes of death, attention has been concentrated on the detection and treatment of these conditions early in the natural course of development," he said.

In the second study, 1513 business executives underwent physical examinations and previously unrecognized diseases were discovered in 40 per cent.

The newly found disease "was believed capable of resulting, if unchecked, in death or major disability in over one-half" (57%) of that number, the Journal article said.

"In one-third (34%) it was judged capable of producing minor disability, while in remaining 9 per cent the disease was judged insignificant.

"The high prevalence of potentially serious disease in members of the 'executive' category who are of favorable socio-economic and educational status makes it reasonable to expect an even higher prevalence of serious latent disease in the population at large."

The report was based on a study conducted at the University of Pennsylvania Diagnostic Clinic from 1949 to 1958. All but 13 of the executives were men. The average age of the group was 45, with a range from 24 to 76.

Examining physicians diagnosed a total of 906 new diseases among 612 persons. Diagnoses of disease involving the gastro-intestinal tract, numbering 240, predominated followed by 189 diagnoses involving the cardio-vascular system.

Church Lectures Continuing for Tonight, Friday

The second annual lecture ship at the Church of Christ at Torrance, 1217 Cravens Ave., will be concluded with meetings this evening and Friday evening at 7:30.

Theme of the lectures is "The Christian's Object in Life," according to the church's minister, Loran Biggs. Speaking tonight will be A. R. Holton on "The Christian's Desire," and Jimmie Lovell on "The Christian's Trust."

Tomorrow night's speakers will be Harold O'Neal, speaking on "The Christian's Warfare," and Alvin Hamilton on "The Christian's Victory." Each speaker is given 20 minutes for his talk and 30 minutes for questions and answers.
